The Department of History at Florida International University is conducting an open search for an Instructor in Modern American History. The candidate’s primary responsibility will be to teach face-to-face and online undergraduate courses on Modern US history, with a 4-4 teaching load. The successful applicant will be expected to incorporate digital approaches to history into their courses and to work closely with FIU libraries and museums and the Wolfsonian Public Humanities Lab in their teaching as well. The person to be hired may also contribute to our transnational PhD program with an emphasis in Atlantic Civilizations, and to relevant programs in the Steven J. Green School for International and Public Affairs and the Wolfsonian-FIU Museum as appropriate. The selected candidate must demonstrate commitment to service to the department, college, and university.

We welcome applications from candidates working in all sub-fields of Modern American history. We are particularly interested in candidates who focus on African American, Latinx, Borderlands, or Women and Gender Studies. Because of the position’s requirements, we also seek applications from candidates who can demonstrate teaching experience with online instruction, public history, digital mapping, or digital humanities. We strongly encourage historically underrepresented minorities and people with experience in teaching diverse student populations to apply.

Qualified candidates must have a PhD in hand by August 19, 2019 and are encouraged to apply to Job Opening ID 516393 at <https://facultycareers.fiu.edu/>. Include a cover letter discussing both teaching and research interests (no more than two pages), a full c.v., at least two sample syllabi with sample assignments, and unofficial transcripts, in a single pdf file. Please send a second copy of all application materials to history@fiu.edu. Three letters of reference must be sent directly by recommenders or via a dossier service such as Interfolio. To receive full consideration, applications and required materials should be received by December 14, 2018. Review will continue until position is filled. The salary will be commensurate with the candidate's previous career and achievement. Email questions to Dr. Kirsten E. Wood, woodk@fiu.edu or call 305-348-2328.
